THE JOURNAL OF PARAPSYCHOLOGY
AND THE PARAPSYCHOLOGY BULLETIN

ALMOST EVERYONE, at one time or another, has had some experience—a hunch, a run of luck, a premonition, or a similarly puzzling event—which he could not satisfactorily explain. Experiences such as these are the raw materials from which the science of parapsychology took its beginnings. In technical terms, parapsychology includes telepathy (extrasensory knowledge of another person's thoughts or mental states), clairvoyance (extrasensory knowledge of things or events), precognition (foreknowledge), and psychokinesis ("mind over matter"). In general, they are covered by the term "psi."

In 1937, when the Journal of Parapsychology was founded, the experimental study of this field was just at its beginning. Today, with extrasensory perception a household term, there is a large body of reliable and important information, world-wide in its origin. It is the purpose of the JOURNAL to report and discuss this material.

First in importance in the contents of the JOURNAL are the reports of experimental research. Other articles attempt to interpret the findings and relate them to knowledge in various fields. Still others are devoted to symposia on some of the challenging questions that arise. There are also historical reviews, discussions of unusual cases, a section on book reviews, and another for abstracts of important articles from outside sources, both foreign and domestic.

The following titles from recent issues of the JOURNAL show the range in subject matter, geographical origin, and point of view which is characteristic of this publication:

A Precognition Experiment Comparing Time Intervals of a Few Days and One Year

ESP Tests with French First-grade Children

Research on Spirit Survival Re-examined

Why National Defense Overlooks Parapsychology

The JOURNAL is published four times a year: in March, June, September, and December. A year's subscription is $6.00; single copies are $1.50; and back numbers, when still available, are $1.75.

JOURNAL subscribers also receive the Parapsychology Bulletin, which gives general news of people and events in the world of parapsychology, as well as brief notes on a wide coverage of books and magazine articles. There is no charge for the Bulletin when it accompanies a subscription to the JOURNAL. Otherwise, it is one dollar a year, for four numbers.

Checks should be made payable to the Journal of Parapsychology and sent to the PARAPSYCHOLOGY LABORATORY, COLLEGE STATION, DURHAM, N. C.
